1. Earlier this year, a new law was passed in Georgia that permits patients suffering from debilitating illnesses, such as epilepsy and cancer, to obtain medical marijuana in the form of a low potency cannabis oil. The law does not permit the recreational use of any cannabis product. In Georgia and elsewhere, treatment using oil derived from cannabis has shown positive effects on these patients, with an extremely low risk of addiction. What is your opinion of this new law, permitting the use of cannabis oil for certain debilitating illnesses?
 - a. Strongly approve
 - b. Somewhat approve
 - c. Somewhat disapprove
 - d. Strongly disapprove
 - e. Undecided or no opinion

2. Currently, Georgia law does not permit the cultivation of cannabis for the production of medical cannabis oil. As a result, patients who are prescribed this medication must travel outside of the state to obtain their medication. Many patients cannot afford to travel elsewhere for treatment, and carrying the medication across state borders is against federal law. In many other states, such as Minnesota, the production and distribution of medical cannabis is regulated under strict laws, which permit less than ten producers under specialized security. Do you support expanding Georgia’s law to permit the production and distribution of cannabis oil for medical purposes under strict regulation and security in Georgia?

5. Currently, Georgia law permits only eight illnesses to be treated using cannabis-derived oil, including cancer, Crohn’s disease, mitochondrial diseases, seizure disorders, ALS, multiple sclerosis, Parkinson’s disease, and sickle cell disease. Research has shown that cannabis oil might also provide relief to patients with other disorders, such as post-traumatic stress disorder, arthritis, and other forms of chronic pain. Do you support expanding Georgia’s list of acceptable conditions treatable by cannabis-derived oil to include additional disorders and illnesses that have shown improvement using this treatment in medical studies?
